

Research Methods Workshops for Early-Career Graduate Students

These workshops, led by top scholars in their fields, teach students near the beginning of their graduate school careers valuable methodological approaches and expose them to working at a research library, through the lens of a particular topic. Students in a terminal master's program and those who have not yet completed comprehensive exams in a PhD program may apply. There are no language prerequisites.

Fall 2015 Workshops: Application deadline: September 10

Friday, October 16

Don Quixote and Theory, Renaissance and Contemporary

Led by Edward Friedman, Vanderbilt University, with Timothy Foster, Vanderbilt University
newberry.org/2015-don-quixote-and-theory

Saturday, October 24

From Manuscript to Print: Evolution or Revolution?

Led by Adam Hooks, University of Iowa, and Michael Johnston, Purdue University newberry.org/2015-manuscript-to-print

Saturday, November 7

Introduction to Medieval Studies at the Newberry

Led by Karen Christianson, The Newberry Library
newberry.org/2015-medieval-studies

Spring 2016 Workshops: Application deadline: December 1

Friday, February 26

Poetry as Theology: New Theoretical Approaches to Dante

Led by William Franke, Vanderbilt University, and Vittorio Montemaggi, University of Notre Dame
newberry.org/2016-poetry-theology

Saturday, March 12

The Turn to Religion: Women and Writing in Early Modern England

Led by Jaime Goodrich, Wayne State University, and Paula McQuade, DePaul University
newberry.org/2016-turn-to-religion

Enrollment is limited, by competitive application. We encourage applications from those studying a wide range of disciplines, including classics, comparative literature, cultural studies, history, history of the book, history of science, literature in English or other relevant languages, manuscript and book studies, and other medieval and early modern disciplines. Students at Newberry Center for Renaissance Studies consortium member institutions have priority, and workshop fees are waived for them.

www.newberry.org/renaissance