

THE NEWBERRY

Center for Renaissance Studies

At the Intersection of Medieval History and the Social Sciences

A Symposium Honoring Barbara H. Rosenwein

Friday, February 28, 2014
Ruggles Hall, The Newberry Library

Speakers

Constance Brittain Bouchard, University of Akron

Kirsten DeVries, Roanoke College

Allen J. Frantzen, Loyola University Chicago

Patrick J. Geary, Princeton Institute for Advanced Study

Elina Gertsman, Case Western Reserve University

Thomas Green, Loyola University Chicago

Theresa Gross-Diaz, Loyola University Chicago

Lester K. Little, Smith College

Maureen C. Miller, University of California, Berkeley

Frances H. Mitilineos, Oakton Community College

Karl F. Morrison, Rutgers University

Jilana Ordman, Loyola University Chicago

Bruce L. Venarde, University of Pittsburgh

Edward Wheatley, Loyola University Chicago

Barbara H. Rosenwein has been an animating presence in the Chicago medieval studies community for more than four decades. From her days as a doctoral candidate at the University of Chicago through her long and lively career at Loyola University of Chicago, Professor Rosenwein has brought the medieval past into dialogue with contemporary questions, mainly through her engagement with other social sciences. She has achieved international renown through her research on the monastery of Cluny and more recently through her pioneering work on the history of emotions. Within the United States generations of undergraduates have been introduced to the medieval past and all its complexities through her Short History of the Middle Ages. This symposium explores the use of social science methodologies and theory in the writing of medieval history through the career of one of its most distinguished proponents.

Cosponsored with Loyola University Chicago and the University of California, Berkeley.

This program is free and open to the public, but registration in advance is required. Register online at:

www.newberry.org/renaissance