Colonial History Lecture Series

New England Bound The Fragmented Archive of Slavery

Wendy Warren

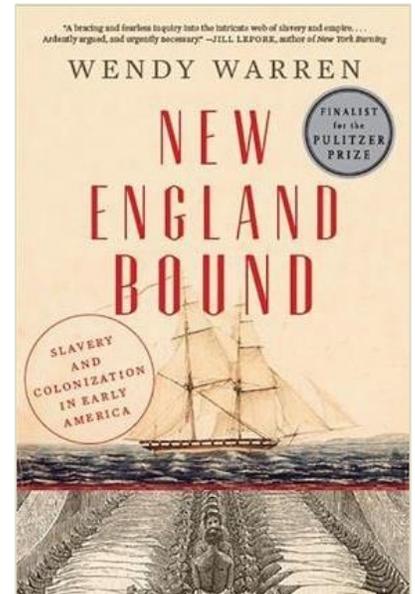

Saturday, April 28, 2018

10:00 to 11:30 am

The Newberry, 60 W. Walton St., Chicago

Wendy Warren will describe some of the lives of enslaved people in seventeenth-century New England, explaining what chattel slavery looked like in a place without plantations or cash crops.

Enslavement took many forms in colonial North America; this lecture will explore what it meant to be enslaved on the periphery of an empire, in the fledgling “Puritan” colonies.

Wendy Warren, assistant professor of history at Princeton University, specializes in the history of colonial North America and the early modern Atlantic World. Her book, New England Bound: Slavery and Colonization in Early America, which will be available to purchase, was a finalist for the 2017 Pulitzer Prize and won the Organization of American Historians’ 2017 Merle Curti Social History Prize.
